Learning Together: Grant Funds Summer Research Projects in Walla Walla

Whitman College students are known for their passion for serving the Walla Walla community. But this summer, more than a dozen students were able to explore community engagement in a new, more holistic model thanks to a community-engaged learning grant from the Andrew W. Mellon Foundation.

The Community-Engaged Summer Research Program (CESRP) was overseen by Kelsey Martin, community learning specialist in the Student Engagement Center, and Associate Professor Matt Reynolds of the Department of Art History and Visual Culture Studies. Martin and Reynolds also co-chair the college's Community-Engaged Learning and Research Initiative (CELRI) committee.

While COVID-19 forced many research projects or summer experiences to move online or be suspended, CESRP built the pandemic into its curricular framework. Several of the projects incorporated community response to the pandemic. Those efforts included a project with Penrose Library and Northwest Archives to document the experiences of the immigrant community during COVID-19; an examination of how the Walla Walla Mutual Aid Network came into action to meet pandemic needs; the growth of small farmers and backyard gardening; and a partnership with Population Health to see how art kits could improve the mental health of coronavirus patients.

Send a photo or short video showing how you're connecting to the Whitman community to whitmantoday@whitman.edu to share in #FrontRowSeat.

On Sunday, Aug. 23 Whitman students participated in a virtual student activities fair. Students strolled campus virtually with their in-game character and spent time exploring different clubs and talking with other students. When characters on the screen were close, a video chat popped up giving participants the ability to chat about different activities.

"Whitman Today" is produced by the Office of Communications and is emailed Monday-Friday to Whitman College staff, faculty and students. All times are listed in Pacific Daylight Time.

Submissions are welcome! If you have a professional or personal accomplishment to celebrate, an event to publicize or other content to share with the Whitman community, email whitmantoday@whitman.edu.
